What is an Echocardiogram?

An Echocardiogram is also known as a Cardiac Echo or an Echo. An Echo uses standard ultrasound techniques to show images of the heart. It displays the pumping action and evaluates the function of the heart valves and detects anatomical abnormalities in the heart. An Echo is performed by a Cardiac Sonographer and are analyzed by a Cardiologist trained to read this type of study.

What will happen during the test?

- The Cardiac Sonographer will meet you in the waiting room and escort you to the examination room.
- You will be asked to put on a gown with the opening to the front.
- The Echo tech will have you lay down on the examination bed and will place sticky patches known as electrodes on your chest. The electrodes will record your heartbeat.
- A colorless gel is applied to the chest and a transducer is used to produce the images. You may experience some pressure from the probe as we try to get the best possible pictures.
- You will be asked to turn on your side to help us obtain a higher quality of pictures.
- A complete report will be forwarded to your physician within 3 business days.
- Risk: You may experience skin irritation at the electrode site or in very rare cases, scarring.
